

ST. CLAUDE

The term "Creole Faubourgs" identifies Faubourg Marigny and the faubourgs, or suburbs, that developed below it in the 19th century as linguistically and culturally distinct from the American Sector developing above Canal Street at the same time. St. Claude Avenue connects many of these neighborhoods. Eclectic and historic, St. Claude is a state highway and at the same time a nationally designated Urban Main Street. The area hosts the annual Fringe Festival and boasts art galleries, bars, restaurants and retail shops. The St. Claude neighborhood is home to the innovative Musician's Village, Branford Marsalis' and Harry Connick, Jr.'s response to the dire housing shortage facing New Orleans musicians after Katrina. It is also the site of William Frantz Elementary School, the first public school in the Deep South to integrate.

ST. ROCH

St. Roch got its name in the late 19th century. Originally known as the Faubourg Franklin, the sparsely settled suburb grew after the Civil War. It owes its current name to the yellow fever epidemic of 1868 when the Church of the Holy Trinity priest prayed to St. Roch for help. None of the congregation died, and in gratitude he established St. Roch Chapel and cemetery in the nearby faubourg in 1875. The chapel grew famous city-wide for effecting cures and, for the already healthy, attracting love. In 1894, the neighborhood's main street was renamed St. Roch Avenue. Through most of its history it has been racially mixed, alternating between blue collar and middle class.

BYWATER

The name Bywater is well-suited for this neighborhood bordered by the Mississippi River and the Industrial Canal. The area has a rich mixture of residential, commercial and industrial areas, with a vibrant working class culture of black and white citizens. The neighborhood was "rediscovered" in the 1970s by artists, musicians, architectural buffs, and people seeking affordable homes. Bywater's bohemian flavor is still strong today, and many art galleries can be found throughout the neighborhood. The Bywater Neighborhood Association was formed in 1975 and has nurtured and guided the community's continued growth and renewal.

FAUBOURG MARIGNY

Immediately downriver of the Vieux Carré, this area was once the plantation of Bernard Marigny, the Creole bon vivant who made the dice game craps popular in America, dazzled all with his flair and lifestyle and whose class and joie de vivre continues to make him the patron saint of this eclectic faubourg.

Designated as a Great American Neighborhood by the American Planning Association for its walk-ability, weekends bring shoppers to a plethora of independent galleries, bookstores, and rummage stores, while restaurants, coffee shops and music clubs along Frenchmen, Franklin and St. Claude offer a taste of authentic style food and music. To add to the fun, Marigny hosts many festivals such as the Satchmo Strut, the Fringe Festival and the New Orleans Bookfair.
