GENTILLY IS A COMMUNITY WHOSE CULTURE IS BUILT ON A HISTORY OF INDUSTRIOUSNESS, DIVERSITY, CHARITY AND GOOD TIMES.

Gentilly history began in 1728 when the area between bayous St. John and Savauge was named by the Dreux brothers. The Frenchmen planted crops, grazed cattle, harvested cypress trees and manufactured the bricks that built New Orleans. Alexander Milne was a Scotsman who made enough bricks that he was able to buy up all the swampland along the southern shore of Lake Pontchartrain. He donated most of his land to the orphans of New Orleans, knowing that someday it would be developed. Milneburg became a bustling port town with its own railroad to New Orleans. After many years the port business declined and the area developed into a resort famed for its contributions to Jazz.

Farmlands remained along the bayous as the swamplands were drained. When the twentieth century dawned the land was subdivided as new generations began to see Milne's vision. Unique residences were built in Gentilly Terrace and along Gentilly Boulevard. When the seawall was built along the lake in the 1930s, development began in earnest. Pontchartrain Beach, which first opened in 1928, was moved to the Milneburg area and thrived into the 1980s.

A naval airbase was commissioned in 1941 along the seawall and later became the campus of the University of New Orleans. Pontchartrain Park, one of the first areas designed to provide home ownership to middle income African Americans, has a golf course, many playgrounds and a strong sense of community. Upscale housing has developed along Bayou St. John and the lake.

Today Gentilly answers the disastrous 2005 storms with a renewed vigor and vision of prosperity. As the host of a Greek Festival each May and the Gentilly Fest in October, its sense of culture, fun and diversity grows. Neighborhood associations are planting thousands of trees, designing playgrounds and enhancing Gentilly's reputation as a family-oriented oasis. Their efforts have brought the new Holy Cross School and the technology-oriented Greater Gentilly High School to the Gentilly area. The four universities in Gentilly give it the feel of a small university town. Nearby City Park and the New Orleans Fair Grounds Race Course, home of the annual Jazz Festival, lend to the atmosphere of culture and fun.
